

Working with footnotes

Marco Pessotto

It came to my attention that people find troublesome to edit texts with footnotes because you have to add/remove them and keeping the numbering in sync turns out to be a problem.

However, the following approach should work for you as well.

Usually I keep the paragraph and the footnote together, and I simply number them [1].

E.g.

* Chapter

My paragraph [1] and text [1]

[1] Footnote

[1] Footnote

Here another paragraph [1]

[1] Another footnote.

Then in the editing window, on saving/preview I use the option: Rearrange the footnotes (under Filters).

After that the text will be edited and become amusewiki.org

* Chapter

My paragraph [1] and text [2]

[1] Footnote

[2] Footnote

Here another paragraph [3]

[3] Another footnote.

Say you swap the paragraphs:

* Chapter

Here another paragraph [3]

[3] Another footnote.

My paragraph [1] and text [2]

[1] Footnote

[2] Footnote

After the preview with the option enabled:

* Chapter

Here another paragraph [1]

[1] Another footnote.

My paragraph [2] and text [3]

[2] Footnote

[3] Footnote

And everything will work.

This way only the order matters, and the engine takes care of the (re)numbering.

This way you can move paragraphs and chapters around without caring about numbering, as long as you carry the footnotes with you.

If you work locally, you may want to use the `muse-preprocessor.pl` script:

$ muse-preprocessor.pl --footnotes --inplace file.muse

which does the same thing as the web interface.
